

RUST ON WHEAT BLAMED FOR SHORT CROP IN STATE

Hessian Fly Also Did Much Damage, Claims Farm
Agent

IN GREAT NEED OF RAIN

Agent Greenawalt Says Potato Bugs Have Been Infesting Tomato Vines

Commenting on the report of farmers in this section of the State that the wheat crop this year had been unusually short, County Agent William P. Greenawalt this morning stated that this condition is due largely to the rust on the wheat. Not only do the farmers report that the yield of grain is light, but the straw is shorter than usual.

Mr. Greenawalt explained this morning that another contributing factor
for this condition is the Hessian fly.
The rust, it was explained by Mr.
Greenawalt, is due primarily to the open winter and the wet weather early this spring. He also said that the Hessian fly, this summer is worse because of the early sowing of the wheat last fall.

The county farm leader, who on Friday returned from the Chambersburg section, stated that conditions in respect to the wheat are the same in Lancaster, York and Franklin counties as they are here.

The cause for the shortness of the straw, it was said, is due to the dry weather late this spring.

Potatoes in general, said Mr. Green-awalt, look good, although the stand in some places is rather poor. This is due to the poor seed. The mild weather last winter caused the farmers to provide unfavorable storage places
with the result that much of the seed was sprouted before planted. The Columbia variety, it was said, will be ready for digging in the near future.

Speaking of the fruit conditions, Mr.
Greenawalt said the peach set is quite heavy. The drop in June was rather extensive, but in spite of this, Bucks county, it was said is assured of a good yield.

The outlook for the apple crop was reported to be fair although at some places the set is said to be rather spotty. This is due to the unfavorable weather conditions during the poloni-zation period. Yellow Transparent apples are being harvested now.

Corn, said Mr. Greenawalt, is suffering because of the lack of rain in all portions of the State. During his trip Mr. Greenawalt observed that the corn crop in Lancaster county had been damaged to some extent by the hail during a recent storm.

Truckers throughout the State are beginning to harvest their tomatoes.
It was learned that for some unknown reason the potato bugs had transferred their affections from potatoes to tomatoes with the result that some damage was done the latter.

CATTLE VALUE SHOWS BIG SLUMP FOR 1931

Total Drop Given for State is $25,968,000; All Classes
of Farm Animals

STATE NEWS NOTES

HARRISBURG.—The slump in value
of horses, cattle, sheep and swine during 1931 amounted to $25,968,000, bringing the total value down to $110-125,000—the lowest since the World War, according to the Bureau of Statistics and Information, Pennsylvania Department of Agriculture.

All classes of farm animals contributed to the decline and all counties shared in the loss. The drop by counties ranged from as low as 10 to as much as 25 per cent.

YORK.—The palms for constructive and optimistic planning go to D. A.
Horn, of the Federal Cigar Company, and J. C. Winter, of J. C. Winter and Company.

The two are opening a cigarmakers'
school in Red Lion, planning to teach unemployed men and women the trade,
so that the concerns will have a supply of competent cigarmakers when business stages a come-back.

SUNBURY.—"Pat," canine veteran of the World War, with service in the German and American armies, and mascot of the 314th Infantry, 79th Division, died at the home of Mrs.
George Finch, this place. He was about 17 years old.

Pat was found by men of Company
M after an attack on the Germans. He had been abandoned by his former owners in a billet when they retreated. He was taken back to the company but "doggedly" refused to make friends with them until one of the men who spoke German took the animal in charge. He then became the idol of the camp.

CHARLOTTE.—All the world loves a lover, and Arthur Whippley who resides near Conneville, is glad it does.

Arthur is a hostler (a hostler being one who does odd jobs about an engine). One night, recently, he was in a quandary as he stood at the roundhouse door of the B. & O. yards. Far away in "them thar hills" she waited for the cottage window, and no transportation was in sight.

Ah! Yes there was, and like a flash it came to Arthur. Like Jack Robinson he was up in the cab of "1862,"
which stood in her berth, steam up and rain! to go.

Out he backed the old trusty. He had pulled the turntable around to meet the berth tracks, but, alas, had forgot to lock the turntable tracks in place. When it pulled out on the turntable, "1862" began to wobble like a nervous pudding. Arthur, undaunted, tried to pull off the table, but his only reward was to have "1862" jump the track.

"Once aboard the lugger and all will be well," thought Arthur, and with three more engines in sight he had three more chances, but nary a one panned out.

The roundhouse had suddenly become a sorry sight.

From out of nowhere came laborers,
engineers, foremen and what not.

When Arthur faced the judge in Fayette county, the stern jurist gave him a "break," deciding to place him under a year's probation in his father's care and ordering the Whip-keys to pay the damages.

The judge was young himself once.

Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Jennings and family, Millersville, are spending this week with Mr. and Mrs. Caleb Rue, Edgely.

ADEQUATE CURRICULUM TAUGHT 90 YEARS AGO

Report of Board of Directors,
Bristol Township, Reveals
Much of Interest

OLD FAMILIES RECALLED

By "The Stroller"

As I sat down to prepare this article, I had spread out before me,
the copy of a report which was presented to the Board of Directors of Bristol Township, back in 1844, by Albert S.
Mendenhall, who was the instructor in charge of the old Badger Public School. As I read this report which had been prepared with care and was still well preserved although nearly ninety years old, and noted the number and variety of studies which were taught by this very accomplished
school master, I developed a respect and admiration for the little one room school house of other days, that I had never possessed before.

The original Badger school house to which reference is made in this article, was a one story frame building, that occupied a piece of ground near the present entrance gates of the Bristol Cemetery, at South Bristol. The name, "Badger" came from a sporting gentleman named Bela Badger, who in the early part of the last century, owned the farms now absorbed by the Rohm & Haas Chemical Company. He owned some very fast horses and maintained a race track in his farm. A very productive fishery known as the "Badger" fishery, was operated by Mr.
Badger along the Delaware River, at what is now Maple Beach, and the road which led from this fishery crossed the railroad and formed an intersection with the Bristol Turnpike, near this Badger Public School.

In this little ungraded school house
which was attended by the children of the farmers who resided in that neighborhood, there were taught,
Latin, bookkeeping, algebra, geometry,
grammar, etymology, geography,
arithmetic, reading, writing, spelling and definitions. A most sensible curriculum, adequate and complete,
to furnish the children of that day with a well rounded education. Perhaps our schools of today, might find it highly profitable to restore the study of "Etymology" back to its old place
in the curriculum.

It was interesting to read the names of the children enrolled in this old Badger school, ninety years ago.
Among the number were, James and William Rodgers. These boys lived on their father's farm, which to those of this generation is known as the Winder farm, being owned by the late Jacob M. Winder, a well known citizen.
These two boys after growing up to manhood, together with their two younger brothers, Robert and Frank, purchased the Bristol Grist and Saw Mills, where the Forrest Block now stands, and operated the business under the firm name of Rodgers Bros.
Mary Rodgers, librarian at the Bristol
Public Library, is a daughter of William Rodgers and Jane Rodgers, who is a teacher in the Bristol Public Schools, is a daughter of James Rodgers.

Half way between Bristol and Schenck's Station, as Croydton, was called in those early days, on the eastern side of the railroad was the Booz farm. From this farm four boys attended this Badger school—Henry, Jesse, Albert and John. Jesse remained on the farm until his death, which occurred when he was well advanced in years. He is remembered by many of the older people of today. Henry removed to Texas and embarked into the cattle business. He died there some years ago.

Nude Bathers Taken Into Custody and Reprimanded

HULMEVILLE, July 19.—Several men and women, bathing in the nude along the Neshaminy above here, were taken into custody a few days ago by Constable Orville Morris and Harry Johnson, reprimanded severely and informed as to the outcome if such occurred again.

Morris and Johnson, receiving complaints that nude bathers were noticed along the creek from time to time, started out to halt such. For several nights they patrolled the banks, and finally surprised one large group.

The members of the parties are said to be strangers in this section; and the officers believe they have nipped
such actions in this locality in the bud.

Conscience-Stricken Man Returns To Trenton Jail

TRENTON, N. J., July 19.—Colonel
Edward B. Stone, warden of the State Prison here, today said he would lay the strange case of John Barclay before the Board of Prison managers
with the recommendation for a parole.
Barclay, with a bundle under his arm, rang the bell at the gates of the prison here last night and asked to see the Warden. "I don't suppose you remember me; I am John Barclay. I have come back to take my punishment."

Colonel Stone stared in amazement.
Before him stood a man who escaped from Leesburg Prison Farm 9 years ago while serving a 15 year sentence
in connection with a shooting at Elizabeth, N. J., in 1918. "I have been living in Baltimore with my wife and two children. I had a good job; things were going well, but I could not have any peace with the thought of my sentence hanging over me, so I had a talk with my wife and we decided the best way for me was to come back and give myself up, and here I am."

Stone placed Barclay in a cell in one of the wings instead of "solitary confinement" as is the custom with recaptured convicts.

Mrs. Helen Collins, Philadelphia, is making an extended visit with Mr.
and Mrs. Marvin Collins, Cleveland street.

BELIEVE BLAZE, BOOZ FARM, THAT OF AN INCENDIARY

Two Stacks Stored With Rye
And Wheat Are Destroyed

LOSS GIVEN AT $340

Bristol Consolidated Fire Department Summoned by Neighbors

Believed the work of an incendiary,
two grain-stacks, containing in the aggregate approximately 12 large loads of wheat and rye, were destroyed by fire on the farm of James M. Booz, Emilie Road, Bristol Township, early this morning.

The damage done by the blaze which was discovered at one o'clock, is estimated by the owner at $340.

The stacks are located about one-fourth mile from the main farm buildings, and the Booz family was unaware of the conflagration until awakened by the passing of the fire apparatus.

The alarm was sent to Bristol Consolidated Fire Department by two boys, neighbors of the Booz's, who first saw the flames.

The wheat and rye was hauled to the stacks the week previous to last,
the final loads being placed but about one week ago.

The loss is covered by insurance.
At no time during the blaze were the other buildings on the place in danger, as the stacks are some distance from the residence and barn.

WHERE TO PARK

Every American community, from the smallest to the largest, is struggling with the problem of automobile parking. Larger centers of population deal with the troublesome situation seven days in the week. With the others it is mostly a Saturday night problem.

Of the suggestions advanced from time to time for relief of traffic congestion, the one that appears to hold most promise is that parking in congested areas be banned. But that does not solve the problem of the hundreds of motorists who come into town to shop or find entertainment and would be kept away if deprived of parking facilities.

Parking bans have not proved practicable in the absence of storage depots. If parking is to be ruled out of congested areas there must be established garages or automobile parks of ample size, situated in the heart of such zones. That city is fortunate that has accessible vacant lots conveniently located or adequate garage parking space.

From time to time it is suggested that underground parking provides the only solution for relief of congestion, but thus far in the United States there have not been constructed subterranean depots of any magnitude.

Either parking must be restricted or prohibited and automobile users made to walk many blocks to their destinations, or satisfactory parking facilities must be provided. Underground garages may prove to be the cheapest and most satisfactory way out of the dilemma.

INDISPENSABLE

Newspaper advertising, its past, present and future, recently attracted the attention of the statistical mind of Babson and statisticians. Having watched it "grow up," he spoke with authority on this wonder of modern business.

It is his opinion that the right kind of advertising was never more essential to business progress than at present, for American factories are geared up to tremendous production and their goods must flow uninterruptedly in huge volume to the consumer.

Coming from the famous statistician, there is great force behind the statement that "mass distribution can only be accomplished by extensive advertising." This explains why advertising has been one of the greatest constructive forces for prosperity and higher standard of living.

The old hit-or-miss methods of advertising have given way to campaigns based on careful scientific research and conducted by experts. The business man who complains that advertising is not pulling as it once did is confessing that he has been bested in the competition of advertising. His method of advertising, not the institution of advertising, is to blame.

Newspaper advertising is an integral part of American business and is keeping one jump ahead of the rest of this stupendous structure. To business it is the light that leads and the staff that supports.

"MURDER of the NIGHT CLUB LADY"

THE NEW THATCHER COLT DETECTIVE MYSTERY

BY ANTHONY ABBOT

COPYRIGHT, 1931, BY COWLEY-FRIEDLE INC., DISTRIBUTED BY KING FEATURES SYNDICATE, INC.

SYNOPSIS

At 11:30 on New Year's Eve, Police Commissioner Thatcher Colt arrives at the exclusive Mayfair Club in response to a mysterious summons from District Attorney Merle Dougherty. The latter informs Colt he believes he knows the "higher-up" responsible for the numerous jewel robberies perpetrated recently which baffle the police.

CHAPTER TWO

"CAN you disclose his name?" Dougherty lowered his voice to a husky whisper as he divulged:

"It's a she!"
"A woman!"

"And what a woman!" hymned the District Attorney, his glances rolling eloquently upward toward the glittering chandeliers.

Thatcher Colt's face lightened with a hunter's startled interest. Had Dougherty really turned up something? The District Attorney now pointed discreetly with his thumb across the empty dance floor. We saw a party of men and women clustered in front of the only vacant table visible in that part of the Crystal Room. Barring the newcomers' way stood a waiter, his hands star-fished in apology. "Through all the talk and laughter, one could hear him repeating, 'I am very sorry, Senator,—this table is positively reserved. You will have to sit farther back!'"

The District Attorney folded his hands over his vest buttons and chuckled.

"They'll take a back seat, all right!" he predicted. "They'll have to."

Even as he spoke, the leader of the party surrendered with a shrug, and with a rueful smile led his guests to the rear.

"Nobody in New York can have that table tonight, except a very certain lady."

As he leaned toward Thatcher Colt, the District Attorney added impressively:

"That reservation is being held for the woman I'm telling you about. What's more, there are tables for her in half a dozen other night clubs as well. She pays for all those reservations, whether she uses them or not—always sure of a ring-side seat, wherever her fancy takes her. Money seems to mean nothing to her. The 'Night Club Lady,' she is called by the Broadway columnists—and sometimes 'The Mystery of Mayfair.'"

Colt's expression remained stolid. "The 'Night Club Lady'?" he repeated. "Do you mean Lola Carewe?"

"So you know of her too?"
"Who doesn't, Dougherty? The widow of Gaylord Gifford, the cotton millionaire."

"But nowadays she calls herself again by her maiden name, Lola Carewe. Mystery why she does that, too. In fact, my dear Thatcher, she is the most mysterious woman in New York today."

Colt seemed suddenly reminded of something.

"Old Gifford died a year after that sensational marriage, didn't he? And when his will was read, there was hardly enough money left to pay the undertaker. Did you want to talk with me about Lola Carewe?"

Dougherty turned his head on one side with a triumphant smile.

"Have you ever seen her?" he countered.

"I think not," replied Colt thoughtfully. "But in a general way I am familiar with her career. She was a cinema performer—was she not?"

"Ten years ago. She first made a hit in a French motion picture about Pompadour—"

"And then went to Hollywood?"

"Where she was a success. The public idolized her. Along came old Gifford and married her. The story now is that she is thinking of going back into pictures."

Here the District Attorney extended one red and hairy forefinger and tapped on the back of Thatcher Colt's hand, as if he were telegraphing, as he added in a low and accusing tone:

"Gifford died a pauper. Yet Lola Carewe continues to live in luxury. The manager told me she will be here any minute now. I just want you to take a good look at her. Then I'll tell you something—"

At this moment, a group from a neighboring table descended on us in a gust of salutations. They were acquaintances of Dougherty who wanted to be presented to the Police Commissioner. Politely Colt surrendered to a barrage of questions. Two slender fire-haired Hollywood sisters in blue gowns at once demanded to know the inside facts about the latest gang war. Colt had to assure them there was no honor among thieves; he was always being asked about that by romantic girls. Next they wanted to know whether women were of any account as detectives. Presently Colt was cornered by a jeweled dowager, to whom he had to explain how finger-print identification differed from the Bertillon system. The dowager was supposed to be the mother of the two red-headed girls in blue, but she was merely an actress hired by the film company to play the part; she lived with the girls and attended them constantly, providing a dignified family background which greatly impressed the young stars' public.

No one noticed me, the fate of all secretaries of important men. I glanced around me curiously. At every table I recognized faces—the shagwags of Hollywood and Broadway. In this indiscriminate assemblage, some were famous and others merely notorious, the good and the bad and the in-betweens of the land of make-believe.

With shrill partings our uninvited visitors hurried off, as the music resumed, and Colt, Dougherty and I faced each other again. "And so," resumed my chief, as if there had been no interruption, "the mystery about the former Mrs. Gaylord Gifford is the source of her income. I seem to remember that Gifford did leave her about half a million in life insurance."

"But look what the creature spends!" cried Dougherty, his gaze almost apoplectic.

"Do you mean to say," demanded Colt in a low tone, "that you have a real reason to believe the widow of Gaylord Gifford is mixed up in a jewel ring?"

"I do!" avouched Dougherty with a positive shake of his head.

"The facts?"

"We have not investigated in vain," returned Dougherty oracularly. "To establish a definite relation between such a woman and the underworld is not easy, and yet—"

"I think your mysterious night club lady is just arriving," interrupted Colt.

To the table that had been so valorously reserved, two prancing waiters now led the night club lady and an elderly escort. In my first glimpse of Lola Carewe, I thought she was the most dangerous beauty I had ever seen, I still think so. Perhaps I am an overly impressionable male; that is what my wife says whenever she hears me mention Lola Carewe's "dangerous beauty." Once at a dinner in our apartment I dared refer to "the smoke tangles of her hair," adding something about a "tamarisk shade." Betty soon enough persuaded our guests—and me—that my poetry was sheer nonsense.

Nevertheless, the dark Lola's appearance in Mayfair that stormy New Year's Eve was startling and brilliant. She was wearing an ermine cloak—the four hundredth that night in Mayfair, where ermine is an evening uniform, but Lola's was an exceptionally handsome one—and under that a gown of white satin. Colt said she carried her head like a peacock.

Behind the night club lady ambled a little old man with dainty ears and a white goatee. He was Vincent Rowland, the sharp-eyed railroad attorney who loved to play Croesus to modern young painters. With a blandiloquence, famous alike in court-rooms and studios, the little old millionaire bowed suavely to several persons and soon was seated opposite Lola Carewe.

"Isn't she beautiful!" exclaimed Dougherty.

"She looks like a woman who has had bad news," murmured Thatcher Colt.

The waiters were serving us food. I found it hard to keep my eyes from Lola Carewe. What were the dark secrets in that queenly head? "Her own collection of jewels is fabulous," Dougherty confided. "East Indian things—like the emeralds stolen from the eyes of idols in Lord Dunsany's plays."

I was listening with only one ear. My attention was drawn back irresistibly to that other table. Now I surprised a curious little drama. I saw their waiter bow low and walk off with a supper order pressed against his shirt-front. At once Vincent Rowland and Lola Carewe began—or perhaps resumed—a spirited discussion. Their heads were close together, and both kept glancing in our direction. Suddenly Lola Carewe drew from her evening purse a golden pen and wrote something on the back of a menu card. As she folded the paper, Vincent Rowland spoke to her earnestly, but she shook her head, her eyes summoned a waiter, and with a whispered direction, she gave him the note.

Colt, too, had observed what was passing. While Dougherty continued to orate on jewel thieves, the chief and I watched to see where the messenger carried that note.

He hurried directly to our table! In front of the Police Commissioner was laid a silver salver on which reposed the folded menu card.

"Pardon me," muttered Thatcher Colt, and picked up the note. Dougherty calmly attacked his soup. He did not realize from whom that billet came.

Colt's strong, tanned face was expressionless as he read the message through. But as he put the paper down, he momentarily closed his eloquent eyes, his only visible sign when deeply aroused.

Across the table he shoved the note.

"Will you read that and take charge of it, Tony?"

Hastily, I scanned the lines, scrawled in a large bold hand: "Dear Mr. Thatcher Colt:

"I must talk with you at once. You can save a human life. Will you do it? I am in my right senses; I never drink and am not neurotic. I want to talk with you on police business. Will you join Mr. Rowland and myself at our table? Or will meet you outside if you prefer. Mr. Colt, please!"

"Lola Carewe."

Dougherty had finished his soup. "What's all that?" he queried, fumbling for a mislaid napkin.

Colt did not smile as he explained:

"Miss Lola Carewe is desperately anxious to give the police some information. Join us, Dougherty?"

For once, the District Attorney was jolted into utter silence. Blank-faced, he followed through the throng. The dance floor was still a swaying mass of jewels, perfume, and joy as we three made our way around the oval to the table of the night club lady.

PARIS COUTURIERS FAVOR CHALK WHITE BUTTONS OF CHINA

By Alice Langelier (U. S. S. Staff Correspondent) PARIS.—"Button, button, who's got the button?" It's wandering all over smart women these days with the couturiers encouraging its use at every turn.

China buttons of the chalk-white variety are the latest French development in button fastenings on the navy-blue and black suits of the mid-season collections. Mother-of-pearl medium sized discs strung closely together are used for short necklets and waistbelts as decoration and otherwise simple black afternoon frocks.

Little round buttons some of pearl or colored enamel and tiny cuts of black jet are smart for a white romaine afternoon gown.

Tiny shaded green buttons catch a pale green jabot on a dainty afternoon gown of soft white wool worn with short coat of brown silk with narrow collar of white lamb. The buttons trim the blouse-bodice as well which is finished with a small brown and white spotted scarf. Brown and white, by the way, are almost taking summer honors away from the magpie craze.

Miranda buttons a summer frock of white pique with red to match the little red and white polka-dotted cape worn over the shoulder and a sash-belt of the same, and another dressmaker has even put buttons down the back of one of her smartest evening skirts. There are six of them below the décolleté.

SPORTS

DOUGHERTY IS FEATURE OF HIBERNIAN GAME

Francis Dougherty's pitching and batting featured the Hibernians' 8-6 victory over the Third Ward team last night on Sullivan's field.

Dougherty held the Third Ward hitters to seven hits and six runs and was very hard to solve in the pinches. Two of the Pikers' runs were the result of an error by L. Brady in the fifth canto. With the stick, Dougherty drove in two runs in the first with a double to centerfield and then in the sixth with the bases bare he slammed out a home run to left field. In his last four games, Dougherty has hit three doubles, two singles, a triple, and two home runs.

"Milt" Jones twirled the entire game for the losers and was handicapped from the start because of his mates' errors and errors of omission. At least half of the winners' tallies were earned. Jones fanned six batters and was found for ten hits.

"Jimmy" Massilla continued his heavy hitting for the Ward, clipping off two triples but as fate would have it, the bases were unoccupied each time. Riola hit in the short-stopper twice with long flies to the outfield.

The winners scored four runs in the first, two in the fourth, one in the fifth, and their final marker in the sixth. The Third Warders scored a run in the second, third, fourth, and countered with three more in the fifth.

A running catch of Sullivan's by McGinley in the third frame was the fielding gem of the evening. "Joey" Roe handled himself well at third base for the Hibernians.

BASEBALL NOTES

Tonight on Sullivan's field, the Hibernians will attempt to hand Johnny Mulholland's Bristol A. A. team its fifth straight defeat when the nine meet in a Lower Bucks County League tilt.

Either Eddie Sullivan or Dave Ennis will toe the slab for the Hibbs. The receiving will be done by Kycab who has made quite a hit with the fans since entering the league in the second half. The other new Hibernian player, Nappy, will play in the outfield or second base.

The A. A. intends to use either Gene Lawler or Lou Kline on the hill with Dougherty doing backstop work. A defeat will sink the Bristol nine deeper into the cellar and probably eliminate them from any hope of finishing in the first division.

Game will begin at 6.30 o'clock.

SUNDAY AT SHORE

BENSALEM 'SHELLACKED' BY NINE FROM SILES

BENSALEM TOWNSHIP, July 19.—Once again John Torpey failed to hold his opponents with the result that such a large lead was gained that this week's baseball game was sewed up in the second inning for Siles. Following Torpey's departure Bill Shibe, a new-comer to the Bensalem Aces, took up the duty on the mound. Shibe pitched a nice game all the way from his entrance to the finish. Errors and lack of speed played havoc with the team from Bensalem.

Durkin, the moundsman for Siles, pitched a fine game and allowed only 6 hits.

Durkin, the moundsman for Siles, pitched a fine game and allowed only 6 hits.

One redeeming feature of the game was the discovery of Bud Haldeman, who donned the mask for the Aces in the ninth frame and played a stalwart game at that post. Don Torpey held his own in the short stop position and made several snappy plays.

Bensalem's lone tally was brought home by Bill States who hit a single and was forced around by Losink. Score ended 15-1.

"3RD DEGREE" INQUIRY LEADS TO SUSPENSIONS

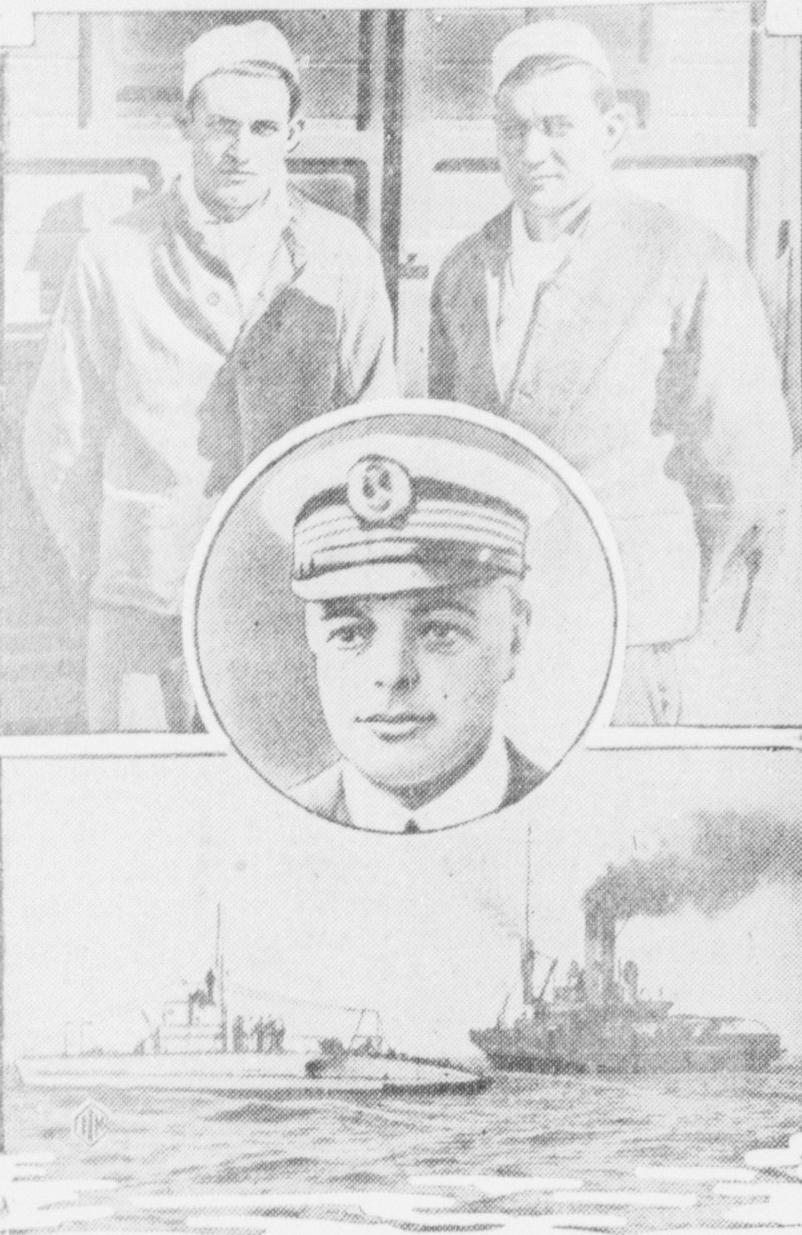

MINEOLA, N. Y., July 19.—(INS)—A story of police brutality used in the dreaded "third degree" that resulted in the death of Hyman Stark, 29, suspected bandit, was unfolded under oath by many witnesses at the John Doe inquiry which lasted until an early hour today.

The probe ended with 13 men and officials of the Nassau County police force ordered suspended and four of these held as material witnesses in the case after the sensational climax provided by Assistant District Attorney Martin W. Littleton. He accused a deputy police chief of boasting of an amazingly cold-blooded act in connection with Stark's death. Littleton said that Deputy Chief Frank Tappen came to him on the day Stark died after being "grilled" eight hours regarding the attack and robbery of a detective's mother.

"That's the toughest — I ever saw," Littleton quoted Tappen as saying then.

"I had to stand with one foot on his neck and one on his stomach and rock back and forth!" Tappen, who sustained a sprained ankle Friday, is more than six feet tall and weighs more than 200 pounds. Another dramatic scene was enacted in the crowded court room over which Justice Meier Steinbrink presided

Over Grave of Submarine Dead

A French Navy cutter and the submarine "Ariane" are shown above the spot in the English Channel off Cherbourg, where the French submarine "Promethee" recently went to the bottom, carrying 63 of her crew to death. At top are two survivors of the "Promethee's" crew with Captain Costel du Mesnil, commander of the ill-fated craft (inset). These men were on deck when the submarine took the fatal plunge and were picked up by a French fishing boat.

"—the Thrill Is Gone!"

By HARDIN BURNLEY

THE recent Sharkey-Schmeling embroglio but emphasized the oft-repeated indictment that the heavyweights of today lack class, color and the ability to provide thrills.

There isn't really one sensational fighter in the current heavyweight ranks. Ineffective boxers, maulers, stallers and ballyhooed "greats" make up the division today. That Baer-Levinsky thing at Reno but a few weeks back, coupled with the Sharkey-Schmeling boxing match, gives you an idea of the "agonies" bouts the fans are now getting.

Baer and Levinsky are considered first-raters and Sharkey and Schmeling fought for the championship.

Where can the fans find another Dempsey? A man who can duplicate the thrills of that Willard-Dempsey battle at Toledo, or the Dempsey-Firpo thriller at New York? Where is there another John L., another glamorous, swash-buckling ringman whose very name brings up visions of thrills?

Let us look over some of the foremost modern heavyweights. There's the giant Carnera, ballyhooed to the point where many thought him invincible. Sharkey walloped him and more recently Larry Gaines out-galopped him in London. There's a sensational draw fight with Jack Sharkey last summer, and only recently was soundly trounced by the Baker Boy of Cleveland, Johnny Risko. That fight, incidentally, was the nearest thing to a heavyweight thriller the fans have had in years.

There's Schaaf, Hamas, Loughran and a few others. Not a thrill in a carload of them. Schmeling looks like the best bet for the future. The German, in the bout with Sharkey, displayed plenty of stamina and boxing ability, but he lacks the essential to thrills—a punch. This last may come to him before long. He is young, and despite his having been champion has not really had the time to learn in actual battle the secret of hitting.

Sharkey, of course, looms as a thrill-maker. He can supply them when in the mood, witness the Maloney, Loughran and Delaney battles. But he also has turned in some exhibitions which could be classed "agonies." But now, having acquired the thing for which he fought for years, the heavyweight title, Jack may become a modern Dempsey. He has always had the equipment and now with the championship he has the incentive.

Well—here's hoping!

when three youths arrested with Stark fearfully but positively pointed out ten policemen and detectives from a lineup of about 30 as those who had put them through an intensive "third degree."

A family named Hulme, lived on the Newportville Road, a short distance below the Bristol Cemetery. Out of this home came Samuel, Isaac, James, Frank, Sarah, and Anna, all of whom were students in this old school house. Among the other students were, William Sinclair, Lewis A. Ridge, Anna M. Ridge, John and Jeremiah Lazzalere, John, Jacob and Charles Foster, Rosina and Lydia Ivins, Jacob Bunting, William Hallowell and Ellis Comfort, all well known names in Bristol Township, nearly a century ago.

From the Badger school house to Schenk's Station, the turnpike was a straight road in fairly good condition. In the days when "Bud" Doble, America's greatest horse trainer and jockey, was at the height of his career, he would exercise his famous horses, "Goldsmith Maid," "Dexter" and "Lady Thorne," on this course. His racing stables occupied the site now covered by the greenhouses owned by Jacob C. Schmidt, at the corner of Otter and Maple streets. The boys of Bristol found great pleasure in exercising these horses for Mr. Doble over this course, and some of them through the kindly instruction of Mr. Doble, learned to ride very well. One of these "old timers" who is still living, told me that he and a number of the boys who had become incipient jockeys through the kindness of Mr. Doble, would wait at Schenk's Station for the arrival of the local train for Bristol, which was in charge of Andrew Quinton, and then race the train up to the Badger School House.

The old school house disappeared many years ago, and nothing remains to mark the spot where it once stood. Many of the boys and girls who attended this little country school, have found their final resting place, in the quiet cemetery, which now occupies the site of this once well known school house. Today the old school house with its pleasant associations is only a memory.
